RePro

■ Introduction

The Products and Services Code has been developed with the intention of compiling the different products and services contracted by the differing companies from the water, energy and naval sectors that participate in RePro. Any product or service that appears in the RePro system must be associated with one of the categories of this code, and every registered company will demonstrate at least one product or service.

■ General structure of the Code

The general structure of the code is as follows:

1. Goods and products
2. Services of a General Nature
3. Building works, installations, engineering services and other associated services

These 3 groups are divided into different sub-groups, and these in turn into specific categories. All products or services must be represented under a specific category, that is to say, by being assigned a third level code (for example, 1.01.01).

The RePro Code was published for the first time in November 1998. Some categories have also an additional field. If you select one of these categories, you should select as well at least one of the offered options.

■ Category selection

You should first identify whether the item you are seeking to register falls within the Goods and products group (1) or would be better represented as a service of a general nature (2) or as a type of building work, installation or engineering work (3).

You should then identify the sub-group sub-groups where the item that you wish to classify could come under. The index to this document can help you with this.

Finally, you need to select the category or categories that are most suitable for the services that your company provides. Such services should be described in your own words in the Description field of the computer questionnaire forwarded.

Said questionnaire includes a tool for locating categories by literal forms of search. It is enough to suggest one word (or part of it) when the category is selected, and the programme will show you all those that contain said characters in your title.

If you cannot find a specific category that correctly represents the product or service offered by your company, you can always use the final category (xx.xx.99) of the sub-group you consider most appropriate. In such a case, pay special attention to the description that you are going to put in the questionnaire. In any event, the Aquiles Registry Department always revises your questionnaire prior to it being approved and exported to the users, and if it is detected that any product or service has not been properly classified, you will be informed of this. For this reason, the description field of the questionnaire is fundamental so that both the users and Aquiles are able to know exactly the type of product or service on offer.

■ Help

A Help field is included in this version of the Code. This brings together some of the products or services that could be included in each category, or any other consideration that may help when it comes to selecting the most appropriate one. It can also be used as a guide for completing the description field of the questionnaire. This help field is not excluding by nature, that is to say, there may be other products or services that come into the category in question that are different from those mentioned. In any event, it is important to specify in the description field which of the products/services included there (or others) are supplied or carried out.

Note: following the revision, some sub-groups may have been left unused (e.g. 1.5), with there being a jump in the numbering for later adaptations.
